About FDP:

There is absolutely no limit to the application of IT in this digital age. The primary applications of information technology in the contemporary world are mobile phones, videos on demand, remote human interactions, multimedia conferencing, online shopping, e-payments, telemedicine, Google maps and the list is endless.

Second application is computer application, which embraces three basic functions viz., storage, processing, retrieval and representation information through effective technologies.

The Use of IT & CS in academic discourses across the disciplines such as Humanities, Social Sciences, Education, Management, Law, Medicine etc. has a varied history. However, in the contemporary times, there is a growing demand for data-driven methods of understanding, creating an array of new set of relationships between the two.

Prefix of "Digital" in humanities, social sciences, education, management, medicines& law could be best defined as field of academic enquiry with the intersection of IT & CS empowering the enquiry with an interdisciplinary scope involving investigation, analysis, synthesis and presentation of information in digital form. Computational Social Science, Cyber Law, Digital Cultural Heritage, Internet Studies, Digital Ethnography etc. are some of the examples.

The objective of this FDP is to understand and identify the horizon to which these academic disciplines could be related to IT& CS in a versatile way and to inculcate IT & Computer Science driven research.
